HEARING ON ROUTE 51 MARCH 17

Big Delegation of Wolf Road Advocates Will Attend Public Hearing at the Hotel Sherman

Tuesday morning hundreds of residents in Will and Cook counties who are interested in making Wolf Road route 51, received notices from the state highway department signed by Col. C. R. Miller, director of Public Works and Buildings and Frank T. Sheets chief highway engineer that a public hearing on the routing of route 51 will be held in the Louis the 16th room of the Hotel Sherman in Chicago on Thursday afternoon, March 17th at 2 o'clock. Each group favoring a particular route have been asked to assign one or more speakers to make such representations as their delegates may wish and that the speakers confine their remarks to the particular route which they represent. Each speaker is limited to fifteen minutes.

At the meeting of the Mokena Development Association Tuesday evening plans were made for attending the hearing. It is expected that a large delegation will go to represent this section. L. G. Bruder who has been serving as chairman of the publicity committee of the organization was empowered to order and have made with an appropriate slogan 500 delegate badges and a number of big banners. Mr. Bruder is to arrange with the Rock Island to have them stop the 11:35 a. m. east bound train to pick up the local delegates.

Mr. Bruder, Don C. Hall, Sr., have been suggested as the speakers for the Mokena delegation. All the men have been requested to be sure and have their wives or sweet hearts go with them as the women are as much interested in this matter and being voters are also entitled to a voice in the proceedings. Mrs. Wm. Semmler, wife of the editor, has been named as the speaker for the women delegates who help all the northern territory.

Mr. Bruder is a veritable dynamo and has stirred up a keen interest in route 51 on Wolf Road through the northern part of the route and many letters and messages have been sent to the highway department urging that Wolf Road be made Route 51.

At the meeting Tuesday night Ed. Cowan of Palos Park and Mr. McCauley gave brief addresses showing how Wolf Road would help all the northern territory.

Mr. Cowan is to be one of the speakers at the hearing next Thursday as also is Chas. Doctor of Orland Township.

Why We Want Route 51 on Wolf Road

The reasons why the advocates of Wolf Road wish to have this road designated as Route 51 are as follows:

First: Because it is the only direct outer belt line which passes thru no congested areas and connects up with all the principal highways entering the west and northwest side of Chicago.

Second: Because it would connect with the Lincoln Highway and run as a straight line all the way from Kankakee to Wheeling, and even beyond the borders of this state into Wisconsin.

Third: Because all the territory along the present Wolf Road north of Mokena is in the mud and by making this a hard road, it would help this territory to develop. The Bartlett Real Estate Co., Chicago owns 900 acres of land near Alpine on Wolf Road which they would develop into subdivisions if a hard road would pass thru or along their holdings.

Fourth: Because Wolf Road would serve more people and communities than any other route. It would be a big boon to the Forest Preserves in Palos and would open 10,000 acres of nature's beauty spots to the people, which cannot now be enjoyed due to lack of hard roads.

In short, Wolf Road would be a "Bread and Butter" road, as Mr. Cowan of Palos Park has so aptly termed it. Wolf road would be the connecting link for all east and west roads and would afford direct connection with Cook County's net work of hard roads.

Wolf Road Would Benefit Palos Park Forest Preserves

Edward Cowan, vice president of Palos Park township of the South-west Towns Chamber of Commerce gave an interesting sidelight on the benefits Palos would derive if Wolf Road is made Route 51, at a meeting of the Mokena Development Association Tuesday night. Mr. Cowan pointed out that Palos has a number of concrete roads but that they are practically all "White Elephants" inasmuch as they all enter Palos but all end on Keane Avenue with the result that this street is very badly congested and he cited an instance where it has taken him one hour and thirty-five minutes to traverse 7 miles of concrete highway out of Palos as a result of this congestion. Mr. Cowan pointed out that the west side of Palos township is with out any concrete highways nor even stone road and that in wet weather many of the people of that section are marooned on account of the impassable mud roads. He showed in a graphic way that the Cook County Forest Preserves own 10,000 acres of forest land in the west portion of the township with no concrete highway running thru. If Wolf Road were made a concrete state road it would cut right thru this preserve and throw open 7,000 acres of forest preserve land to the public. The prettiest spots of the entire forest preserves in Palos are in that section and would be easily accessible on a concrete road.

Mr. Cowan said that the Wolf Road would help solve the road problem in his section. Not only would Wolf Road help the Forest Preserves, but it would also enable the Palos people to get to other towns and to Chicago without running into traffic jams as is now the case. Mr. Cowan has had considerable experience with the securing and building of concrete roads in Palos and is a strong supporter of Wolf Road as the proper routing for route 51. He will represent Palos at the Public Hearing on Wolf Road to be held at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, by the state highway department Thursday afternoon, March 17th at 2 o'clock.

Endless Human Chain Works Hard To Save Life

BULLETIN
Chicago, Ill. March 10. 10 A. M. Editor News-Bulletin, Mokena, Ill. Alfred Frick still conscious and fighting for life after more than 90 hours of artificial respiration administered by fifty-six man crew working in shifts. He was able to take broth and egg-nogg thru tube Wednesday night. Doctors on case say it is impossible to predict outcome, altho condition in general is some what better than Wednesday morning.

Public Service Company of Northern Illinois.

Holding in their hands the slender life thread of a comrade, Evanston and Park Ridge employees of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois have succeeded—with their hands—in preserving the delicate strands of that thread for nearly 100 hours.

Since 11 o'clock Sunday morning, Alfred Frick, 22 year old salesman in the Public Service store at Park Ridge, has been kept alive by artificial respiration. Fellow-employees, organized in shifts and working in pairs have been constantly at his bedside since that hour. Trained diligently by their company in the skillful application of First Aid measures, including artificial respiration, these Public Service men—more than a score of them—have been mobilized at the St. Francis hospital in Evanston, waiting and working, working and waiting—each man eager for his shift at the bedside, literally to breathe for Alfred Frick.

Following a sudden illness, characterized by severe cramps in the stomach, young Frick was taken to the hospital last Saturday afternoon. Saturday evening progressive paralysis set in, travelling rapidly thru the patient's lower limbs and upward toward the brain. Sunday morning the malady was diagnosed as the dread Landry's paralysis. At 10 o'clock it was evident to three physicians in attendance that Frick's diaphragm was becoming paralyzed. A short time later, natural respiration ceased; the young man was dying.

Instantly the doctors started application of artificial respiration and dispatched a call for assistance in this work to John S. Reesman, Public Service Company district manager at Evanston. By 11 o'clock the first volunteers had arrived, summoned by Mr. Reesman to meet the emergency. By 12 o'clock, organization of relief crews had been perfected. Men were assigned to work in pairs, 15 minutes at a stretch.

Carefully, soberly, skillfully, they went at this job of breathing [continued to back page]

Pupils Boss Schools Says Mr. Knight Before P. T. A.

The Mokena P. T. A. meeting at the school house Tuesday evening was a pleasant affair. A nice attendance was noted. Mr. J. C. Knight, former Frankfort school principal, entertained with readings and impersonations, giving readings from James Whitcomb Riley, Edgar Allen Poe and other fine poets.

Mr. Knight gave a short talk in the first part of his program dealing on the much prevalent suicide among college students. He cited the time of past years when children were sent to school with the instruction from parents, that if they received a whipping at school, they would get another one at home. He said that is not the case any more. Children and pupils are now running the school. That if they had a disagreement with their teacher, they were backed up at home in the stand they took. There fore pupils get the idea that they can have things as they want it, which lasts thru grade school and continues thru high school also. But, Mr. Knight said when they enter college, it is different. There students must obey the laws etc., of the institution which causes a mental depression with the student when they realize their way cannot be had any more and not knowing what to do about it, not being used to subjecting themselves to wills not their own, suicide is the outcome.

Mr. Knight said, if parents would tell their children when they come home with a tale about their teacher's action etc., that the teacher is there for their good, has their best interests at heart, this would change this modern trend.

Take Salts to Wash Kidneys If Back Pains You or Bladder Bothers

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids, to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

—14—

The three dummies were then disposed to the satisfaction of Ta-wan-ne-ars and, striking flint and steel to some rotten wood, a bright blaze sent the shadows chasing each other around the confines of the glade.

"Peter," he said, "you had best take post by that boulder on the other side of the fire, Ormerod and Ta-wan-ne-ars will lie together upon this side." "You need not think it necessary to keep me by your side," I said indignantly. "Tis not the first time I shall have heard musketry."

A gleam of humorous intelligence chased the gloomy ferocity from the Seneca's face.

"Ta-wan-ne-ars does not doubt the valor of his brother," he said, "but Ormerod has never fought with Cahnuagas. They are dogs, but they are skilled in forest war."

He sank down behind a boulder next to the one by which I stood. Corlaer had been swallowed by the dancing shadows beyond the fire.

I dropped beside Ta-wan-ne-ars, and like him, dusted fresh powder into the pan of my musket, drew tomahawk and knife from their sheaths and laid them on the ground within reach.

It must have been at least two hours after we had taken cover that Ta-wan-ne-ars touched my arm, and the light from the glowing bed of coals revealed a feathered head crouching forward where the trail entered the glade.

He hovered around the edge of the firelight like a monstrous reptilian fiend, body bent nearly double, a glint of steel showing whenever the hands moved. Presently he withdrew into the trail, and it seemed that two more hours dragged by on leaden feet, although it was probably less than half that time.

The fire was lower, but Ta-wan-ne-ars did not need to warn me when the Keepers reappeared. It was as if a mist of evil preceded them. My senses were alert, and I saw the first feathered head emerge from the trail and each one of the six who followed their leader. I counted every step of their approach until the yellow paint which streaked the ribs of the one nearest to me glimmered in the light of the embers.

"Hah-yah-yah-eee-eee-eee!"

Ta-wan-ne-ars sounded the war-whoop as he fired, and instinctively I aimed my piece at those ochre-tinted ribs and pressed the trigger. The report of my musket carried on the echoes which had been roused by the Seneca's. Corlaer's discharged as I bounded to my feet.

The Cahnuagas yelled in surprise; three of them were thrashing out their lives on the rocks. But the four survivors did not hesitate. They fought like the devils they really were.

One of them was on me immediately, bounding over the boulders with screeches that split the night. His knife and hatchet cut circles around my head—then chopped at my bowels. His activity was extraordinary, and he fought better than I, for he knew his weapons and they were strange to me.

It was the realization of this which saved me. Fending awkwardly with knife or hatchet against a foe whose handling of them was the result of lifelong training, I was at a disadvantage.

So I changed the tomahawk to my left hand, and grasped the knife by the hilt as if it were a sword, thrusting with it point first instead of slashing as the Indian did. And now my skill at fence was in my favor."

The Cahnuaga's knife was no longer than mine. We were on equal terms—or rather the advantage inclined toward me. Bewilderment showed in the Indian's face. He did not understand this fighting with passes and parries and swift, stabbing assaults.

My chance came the next time he charged me, goaded into desperation by these strange tactics. I aimed a smashing blow at his head with the tomahawk, and, as he lifted his own hatchet to guard, I thrust for his belly, parried his knife and ripped him open.

His death yell was in my ears as I leaped over his body and looked to see how my comrades were doing. Ta-wan-ne-ars had just killed his man and was running to the help of Peter, who had two assailants on his hands. As Ta-wan-ne-ars came up, the Dutchman closed with one, dashed the defending weapons aside and grasped the struggling savage in his powerful arms. The last Cahnuaga turned to flee, but Ta-wan-ne-ars did not even attempt to pursue him. Without any appearance of haste the Seneca balanced his tomahawk, drew back his arm and hurled it after the fugitive. The keen blade crushed the man's skull before he had passed from the circle of firelight, and Ta-wan-ne-ars sauntered across and scalped him.

"That time Ta-wan-ne-ars did not miss, brother," he observed to me as I watched with fascinated horror the bloody neatness with which he dispatched his task.

Peter brought up his captive and tossed the man down in front of us.

"Oof, that was a good fight!" he commented placidly.

"Why a prisoner, Peter?" asked Ta-wan-ne-ars.

"We will ask him of der Doom Trail," returned Corlaer.

He jerked the man to his feet.

"Where is der Doom Trail?" he demanded.

The Cahnuaga, badly shaken though he was, drew himself erect and folded his arms across his painted chest.

"The Rat can go to the torture stake and not answer that question, Corlaer," he said quite simply.

"We will take you to the nearest village and let you make good your boast," threatened Ta-wan-ne-ars.

The Cahnuaga smiled.

"If I told you, none the less should I suffer at the stake," he said, "for the Gago-sa Ho-nun-as-tase-ta (Mistress of the False Faces) knows all. Do your worst, Chief of the Long House."

A tinge of mockery colored his voice.

"Be sure that whatever you do you cannot equal the ingenuity of the Gago-sa. Yes, I think you will come to know more about them some day, Iroquois. I seem to see pictures in the freight of a stake, and a building with a tower and a bell that rings, and many of the Gago-sa dance around you, and your pain is very great. Aye, you are shrieking like a woman; you—"

He sprang, not at the Seneca but at me. His hands were around my throat before I could move. His eyes blazed into mine. His teeth gnashed at my face. A gout of blood, thick and warm, defused me. The next thing I remembered was seeing Ta-wan-ne-ars bending over me.

"My brother is whole?" he asked anxiously.

"Yes," I said, sitting up and rubbing a very sore throat, "except that I shall not be able to swallow for a time."

"You were choked, brother."

"And the Cahnuaga?"

"That dog is dead. Do you sleep now, for the dawn grows near and we must be upon our way."

I stirred to wakefulness when the first pink light of morning was in the eastern skies. A pungent whiff of wood smoke filled my nostrils, and I turned over to watch Corlaer frying bacon and maize cakes.

After eating, I fell into my place between the Dutchman and Ta-wan-ne-ars. In five minutes the forest had closed around us. The glade of last night's adventure was shut off as completely as if it existed in another world. There remained no more than the bare groove of the trail and the encompassing walls of underbrush and overhead the roof of tree boughs.

That afternoon we forded the Mohawk to the southern side some distance above Gane-ga-haga (near Danube, N. Y.), the Upper Mohawk castle. And now for the first time we began to meet other travelers. Several Mohawk families shifting their abodes on account of poor crop conditions in their old villages; a party of Oneidas of the Turtle clan journeying on a visit of condolence to the Mohawk Turtles, one of whose roy-an-ehs had just died; a band of Mohawk hunters returning from the spring hunt. By these latter Ta-wan-ne-ars sent word to So-a-wah, the senior roy-an-eh of the Mohawk Wolf clan, charged with the warding of the Eastern Door, of our encounter with the Cahnuagas and its result.

The evening of the third day we camped in the Oneida country at the base of a hill, which the trail encircles and which for that reason was called Nun-da-da-sis ("Around the Hill"; present site of Utica, N. Y.).

British Public Balked at Sanitary Methods

The meeting of the congress of the Royal Sanitary Institute recalls the strong opposition which sanitary reformers once encountered. The Times in 1854 rejoiced that Chadwick had received a pension which would enable him to leave dirt and disease alone: "Aesculapius and Chiron, in the form of Mr. Chadwick and Doctor Southwood Smith, have been deposed, and we prefer to take our chance of cholera and the rest than to be bullied into health."

Another complaint was that their activities had established "a perpetual Saturday night, and Master John Bull was scrubbed and rubbed and small-tooth-combed till the tears ran into his

Here we had a stroke of what turned out afterward to be rare good luck. Whilst we were making camp a group of five canoes of the birch-bark which is used by other nations than the Iroquois approached from upstream, and their occupants camped beside us.

These Indians were Messesagues, whose country lay between the two great inland seas, the Erie and Huron lakes. They were on their way to Fort Orange or Albany to trade their winter catch of furs, which lay baled in the canoes.

They told Ta-wan-ne-ars they had had trouble with the Steur de Tonty, commander of the French trading post of Le De Troit (Detroit, Mich.), which had been established in their country; and that in consequence De Tonty had been obliged to flee and they had decided to shift their trade to the English. Ta-wan-ne-ars encouraged them in this design and described to them the high quality and quantity of the goods they might expect to get in exchange for their furs at Albany.

On the fourth day the trail abandoned the headwaters of the Mohawk, fast shallowing in depth, and headed westward across the mile-wide divide of land which separates the waters flowing into the Mohawk and Hudson river from those flowing into Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence river of Canada.

I had my first view of the long houses of the Iroquois at the Oneida Castle, Gano-a-lo-hale ("A head on a pole"), which was situated on the Oneida lake. They were impressive buildings, sixty, eighty, one hundred and sometimes one hundred and twenty feet in length and from twelve to fifteen or twenty feet wide. We went as a matter of course to the lodgings of the Oneida Wolves, of whom Ta-wan-ne-ars, according to the Iroquois code, was a blood-brother; and they placed at our disposal a guest chamber, the first next to the entrance of the Gano-sote (Bark house), together with all the firewood and food which we required and an aged squaw to cook and wait upon us.

From the Oneida castle the Great Trail bore westward past De-o-sa-daya-ah (Deep Spring), which lay on the boundaries of the Onondagas, whose beautiful valley, with its morrow lake, was the fairest country I have ever seen unless it be the matchless home of the Senecas. The trail led us through the three villages of the tribe, which were scattered along the banks of the Onondaga river northward of the lake.

It was a rich country which we traversed, a country fit to be the home of a race of warriors. The people we met, in the villages where we sometimes slept and ate or along the shaded slot of the trail, were pleasant and courteous. They eyed me curiously, but there was never any unseemly disregard of manners. Even the children were polite and hospitable.

We slept that night in the Cayuga village, and in the morning forded the foot of the lake and pursued the trail westward again until it emerged upon the north bank of the Seneca river, which we followed to the village of Gannun-dagwa (site of Canandaigua, N. Y.), on the lake of that name.

"Now we are in the country of the Senecas, brother," said Ta-wan-ne-ars, when we started the next morning. "You have seen the homes of all the other tribes, save only the Tuscaroras, who live to the south of the Oneidas; but none of them is so fair as the valley of Gen-nis-he-yo (literally, 'The Beautiful Valley'), where my brethren dwell."

From a little village that was huddled on the near bank of the river Ta-wan-ne-ars sent off that night a messenger to carry on word of our coming. So two days later, when we had passed the Gen-nis-he-yo and the belt of forest beyond to the Senecas' chief town, De-o-nun-da-ga-a, it was to find ourselves expected guests. Warriors and hunters, women and children, along the trail, hailed Ta-wan-ne-ars and his friends; and at the gate of the palisade which fortified the village—for it was the principal stronghold of the Western Door—stood Do-ne-ho-ga-weh himself, the Guardian of the Door, with his roy-an-ehs and ha-seh-no-wa-weh (literally, "An Elevated Name"), or chiefs, around him.

He was a splendid looking old man, tall as Ta-wan-ne-ars, his massive shoulders unbent by age, his naked chest, with the vivid device of the wolf's head, rounded like a barrel; his pendant scalp-lock shot with gray. He and those with him were in gala dress, and the sun sparkled on elaborate beadwork and silver and gold ornaments and inlay of weapons.

eyes, and his teeth chattered, and his fists clenched themselves with worry and pain."

What would the writer of this protest say if he could see the public health service today? According to his standard by this time Master John Bull ought to have been washed altogether out of existence and poured away with the soap-suds.—Manchester Guardian Weekly.

WAYS WITH SWEETBREADS

Sweetbreads are perishable meat and as the warm weather of spring comes on, will be more plentiful. When the price is not prohibitive they should be frequently used.

Braised Sweetbreads.—Place in a baking pan a layer of new peas, small carrots and new potatoes; on this bed of vegetables place par-broiled sweetbreads with a few cubes of fat salt pork. Add enough of the stock in which the sweetbreads were cooked to cover the vegetables. Cover tight and cook for forty minutes. Season with salt and pepper during the cooking.

In almost every method of serving sweetbreads they need the following preparation: Be sure that they are fresh, as they spoil very quickly. Remove all the skin, fibers and tubes without breaking the sweetbreads. Soak in cold water to keep them firm and to extract the blood. Drain and put to cook in simmering water slightly salted and with a tablespoonful of vinegar to a quart of water; simmer for twenty minutes, then plunge them into ice water to keep them firm and white. If they are to be baked, wrap them in a cloth and put under a weight to flatten them.

Sweetbreads in Gelatin.—Cut cooked sweetbreads into small dice, using two cupsful. Soak a tablespoonful of gelatin in one-fourth of a cupful of the broth and dissolve it in one-half cupful of hot broth. Add the sweetbreads, one tablespoonful of lemon juice and salt and pepper to taste. Stand the mixture in a pan of ice water, stir frequently and as it begins to stiffen, fold in one cupful of whipped cream and two tablespoonfuls of minced parsley. Turn into molds and chill. Serve cut into slices laid on crisp lettuce, with salad dressing.

Creamed Sweetbreads.—Parboil a sweetbread, cut into one-half inch cubes or small pieces. Reheat in one cupful of white sauce and serve on toast or in patty shells, or timbale cases.

Sweetbread Salad.—Cut fine cooked sweetbreads, mix with celery and mayonnaise. Serve on lettuce.

Stuffed Steak.—Take a nice cut of round steak, prepare the dressing as for fowl, spread the steak with the dressing, lap over and sew together. Place in a dripping pan, season with salt and pepper and strew the top with minced onions and bits of butter; add a little hot water. Roast slowly for an hour or more. Prepare the gravy and serve.

Commonplace Dishes. When a small amount of meat must supply the main dish for the family it may be placed out in the following manner:

Baked Sausage With Rice.—Cut pork sausages into thin slices; butter a baking dish and fill with cold boiled rice. Moisten the rice with beef broth, gravy or beef extract, spread the sliced sausages over the top and bake in a hot oven until the sausage is crisp.

Kentucky Batter Corn Bread.—Take two cupfuls of corn meal, three eggs (beat well), one teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of fat, mix with milk to a soft batter to pour. Pour into buttered shallow tins and bake in a hot oven.

Hot Cheese Sandwiches.—Break open hot baking powder biscuit, spread with butter and lay in a thin slice of good flavored cheese. Cover with a hot cloth and serve quickly. With a cup of tea and a dish of fruit, this makes a nice lunch.

Baked Hash.—Butter a shallow baking pan and pile in chopped seasoned veal with a hard cooked egg or two finely chopped, season with salt, pepper, melted fat and a green pepper finely chopped; moisten with a little gravy or broth and bake until crisp.

Potato Soup.—Peel one-half dozen potatoes and put to cook in boiling salted water to cover. In a saucepan put three tablespoonfuls of butter and when melted add two or three sliced onions; cook until slightly yellow, then add some of the potato water and finish cooking. Mash the potatoes, draining off all the water over the onions and add hot milk, salt and butter with the onions to the potatoes. Serve unstrained, or if preferred the soup may be put through a sieve and then reheat.

Chicken Custard.—Take one-half cupful of strong chicken broth, add one-half cupful of milk, one egg, salt and pepper to taste. Strain into cups and bake in hot water. This is especially good for invalid cookery.

Steamed Brown Betty.—Mix two cupfuls of brown bread crumbs with two cupfuls of chopped apple, add two-thirds of a cupful of brown sugar, one cupful of raisins mixed with two tablespoonfuls of flour and one-half teaspoonful of salt; add one cupful of milk to which one beaten egg has been added and beat well. Steam in buttered molds two hours. Serve with lemon sauce.

Inscription Rock

MOST of us have cherished the possession of an album of autographs of relatives and friends, but when it comes to such treasures the state of New Mexico claims to possess the largest, and no doubt the oldest, autograph album in all America if not in all the world.

Known locally as El Morro and situated near the town of Wingate, it now is one of Uncle Sam's national monuments. This "album" consists of a huge rectangular-shaped rock of whitish sandstone, its walls being almost straight up and down and some 200 feet tall, suggestive of a temple of extraordinary size. It is unique in that it has but four pages (sides) and was formed by nature ages and ages ago—its seamed and weather-worn sides plainly showing the ravages of centuries of time.

The existence of this massive album was undoubtedly known to the Indians long before the attention of white men was drawn to it in 1849 by Lieut. J. H. Simpson who "discovered" it while on a military expedition.

The surface of this rock is fine-grained and easy to scratch, which fact evidently led passers-by to form the habit of recording their passing, because its sides hold inscriptions without number—all very ancient, many in Spanish—the oldest still decipherable going back to 1606. Another records the fact that the "Most Illustrious Sir and Captain General of the Province of Mexico, for the King, our master," passed by here on the return from the village of Zuni, the 27th day of July of the year 1621. There are also many crude drawings of snakes, suns, men and women.

Easter Sunrise Pilgrimage

TO the west of the beautiful city of Riverside in southern California, in the valley of the Santa Ana river, stands a little mountain named Mount Ribidoux, in perpetual commemoration of the name of the first white settler in these parts, Louis Ribidoux.

This mountain rises 1,000 feet above the town, or 1,837 feet above the sea, and is unusual in that it is almost of solid granite, its summit being crowned with huge boulders. The local town folk have venerated this mountain and long ago wore a trail up it to enjoy the rare view from the top.

Army engineers then built a driveway to the top, going one way and descending another. After this road was formally dedicated, a rough-hewn cross was erected on the highest point to preserve the memory of the crosses of the mission days and Junipero Serra, the founder of the California missions.

This gave birth to the thought that something in the way of a community religious occasion be instituted here, out of which grew the Easter morning pilgrimage which has attracted so much attention.

Easter sunrise is the greatest Christian religious moment. It was reasoned, therefore, that if people saw a sunrise in connection with religious thought the two things would effect a marked religious stimulus for the community.

The first year but a little handful of persons gathered around the cross for this simple sunrise service. Eleven hundred automobiles were counted ascending the driveway to witness a recent service.

The Historic Potomac

THE historic Potomac river has played an important part in the development of America ever since the settlement of Jamestown, Va. The Pawtux Indians lived along its lower banks and the name Potomac doubtless came about in this way.

This picturesque waterway—famed far and wide for its scenic beauty—rises in the Allegheny mountains and flows 'cross-country in a southeasterly direction for some 450 miles to the Chesapeake bay. On the way it obligingly acts as boundary line between Maryland and West Virginia and also between Maryland and Virginia.

It cuts through the Blue Ridge mountain, drops 90 feet in a series of falls near Washington, meets tide-water at Georgetown, D. C., is navigable from Washington to the bay but is not a heavy traffic carrier, and below Washington becomes an estuary varying in width from two and one-half to seven miles and ranging from twenty-five to two-hundred feet in depth.

Its geographic location is so strategically important that it has been repeatedly bathed in war and blood. In the early days it was the battleground of savage tribes. Then came encounters between early white settlers and the Indians. Many tragic battles of the Revolutionary war were fought in this region. Finally, when the Civil war broke out, it became a skirmish line from practically one end to the other, between the Union and the Confederate forces.

The activities of our first President, George Washington, were inseparably associated with the Potomac, and he died in a house which overlooked its peaceful waters.

ROAD BUILDING

LINCOLN HIGHWAY
BEST IMPROVED

The Lincoln highway between New York and San Francisco, 3,142 miles in length, has been improved by the states and counties on all but 41 miles of its entire distance. This 41 miles is located in Utah. Moreover, its entire length is uniformly marked with the characteristic Lincoln highway signs, enameled in red, white and blue on a steel background.

Forty-one miles is 1.3 per cent of 3,142 miles, hence a motorist is now offered a road between New York and San Francisco 98.7 per cent improved.

In an address delivered by the secretary of agriculture before the American association of state highway officials at Pinehurst, N. C., the secretary pointed out that by following a more or less circuitous route between Washington and San Diego one could find a road 97 per cent improved. In his article the secretary says that the route he describes is merely a collection of improved roads and does not coincide with any of the United States routes. Neither is it identical with any of the various trails which have been promoted in the past.

The secretary of agriculture points out three other transcontinental roads, one of which is 88 per cent improved, another 75 per cent improved, the third 68 per cent improved. In his calculations apparently he has inadvertently overlooked the improvements that have been made upon the Lincoln highway, which leads all other possible routes as the shortest and most improved between the two coasts.

The fact that the Lincoln highway is best improved is generally well known to motorists as evidenced by the fact that during the touring season it carries the largest amount of travel. Moreover, it is the route that has always been selected to establish transcontinental records—for the simple reason that one attempting to make a rapid drive across the country carefully selects the best improved road. One of the great advantages the motorist has in following the Lincoln highway is that it is not necessary for him to make inquiry; the constant procession of permanent, uniform signs assures him that he is on his road all the time. It is the only transcontinental route that is uniformly marked.

Road-Building Activity Seen in Various States

Feverish road-building activity in many states is the result of a laudable desire to keep the highway up with the automobile. Pennsylvania recently sold a $10,000,000 block of a $50,000,000 bond issue to be used for highway improvements, and construction goes on steadily. In New Jersey, the state highway engineer has recently submitted a 12-year program for the development of 1,900 miles of modern roads—not an inconsequential task for a small state.

These programs are the result of extensive surveys, but the question arises: Are they adequate? It is doubtful whether any man a generation ago could have forecast the tremendous increase of motor travel. It is also doubtful whether any present-day surveys can quite encompass the future.

The growth of the modern highway systems makes a striking story. Before the automobile came into general use little attention was paid to the roads. If they were passable, they would do; smoothness was not a great factor in the horse-and-buggy days. But with the advent of the automobile better and smoother highways were demanded. Highway commissions were created and millions of dollars in appropriations and taxes were exchanged for surveys, labor and materials to increase the speed and comforts of travel. Each year finds the struggle intensified. Possibly the highway will catch up with the automobile when commercial air routes begin to bear some large proportion of the modern transportation burden.

Good Roads Notes

Planting trees along the roads is a good plan if the horticulturists can develop a tree with a bumper.

At the present time it is estimated that in the United States there are no fewer than 44,000 miles of concrete roads, as against only 300 miles in the United Kingdom.

Twenty times around the world! Such, at any rate, is the distance American motorists could travel on their 500,000 miles of surfaced roads.

Traffic problems are just as baffling in the Alaskan cities of Ketchikan and Juneau as they are in large American cities. The difficulty is not an overabundance of autos but a lack of roads.

Based on the prediction that by the end of the year there will be 450,000 motor cars in Kansas, it is estimated that the funds for road work in that state will be nearly $10,000,000. License fees will account for $4,500,000 of this total, and a two-cent gasoline tax for the remainder.

Valve Was Doing a Double Trick

Harvey S. Firestone, returning on the Paris from an inspection of his million-acre rubber plantation in Liberia, said to a New York reporter:

"Our plantation is superb, and the Liberian climate is superb, too, provided you observe the laws of hygiene. For the ignorant the climate may be dangerous, but what isn't dangerous if you're ignorant?"

"An Akron engineer came across a chap on a country road one day who was in charge of a traction engine that was stuck in the mud."

"The engineer got out of his car to lend a hand."

"Friend," he said, "look at your gauge here. It only registers ten pounds. You'll never get out of the mud with that little bit of steam. Better wait till you have more."

"Ten pounds?" snarled the chap. "Ten pounds, hey? Why, mister, the safety valve is screwed down and that pointer is away around for the second time."

The Wrong Knowledge

Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, the famous clergyman, said on his eighty-fourth birthday at Lake Placid:

"The young know too much, and at that it's the wrong kind of knowledge. Even little children nowadays—"

"A schoolteacher chalked the Roman numerals XXX on the blackboard."

"What does that mean, children?" she asked.

"The class of children giggled in a shocked way, and a little girl piped: 'Kisses.'"

Lost Money Restored

Twenty-six years ago a purse containing $63 was lost by Alfred Canto of Malone, N. Y. Recently an envelope from Pittsfield, Mass., was delivered to Canto containing that amount and a note, which read: "This is the money you lost 26 years ago." A card was inclosed with the request that it be returned to the sender so that he might know that Canto received the cash.

Disease Works Havoc

in Wild Duck Flocks

Creation of bird sanctuaries throughout the country where wild fowl may nest and feed in safety is proposed in a federal game refuge bill, and sportsmen are recommending its adoption to check the rapid decrease in the number of birds, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The plan includes the establishment of public shooting grounds, adjacent to the preserves. According to experts, ducks in the western part of the country are threatened with extinction unless ways are found to combat a form of paralysis which afflicts them after drinking contaminated water. This disease is widespread near Great Salt lake. It afflicts other marsh birds as well as ducks and, when least prevalent, takes a toll of 30,000 to 100,000 yearly, while more than 1,000,000 ducks alone are killed in the worst years. The salts in the waters have made them poisonous to the fowls. The malady does not prove fatal if the birds can get fresh water in time.

Exhaustion the Result of Thoughts of Work

A person may literally wear himself out doing nothing, according to William Frederick Book, professor of psychology at Indiana university. He cites in the American Magazine the case of a boy who was taken to a nerve specialist, whose examination revealed symptoms of overwork.

The physician rebuked the boy's parents for allowing him to become overworked, but learned, to his amazement, that the boy had done practically no work at all. The youth's one task was to carry one pan of water each day from a spring a quarter of a mile from his home, a task required by way of discipline. But the boy dreaded it so much that he wore himself out thinking about what a lot of hard work he had to do.

Curfew for Women

Magistrates in the little seaside town of Hastings, England, near where the Normans conquered King Harold in 1066, say that all women should be in their homes by ten o'clock at night. They were asked by a saloonkeeper, who wished to give a party to his women customers, for permission to keep his premises open after ten o'clock, the usual closing time. His application was refused on the ground that all women should be in their homes at that time.

Bulletin Issued on Will County Sheriff Election Contest

The following bulletin has been issued in the Will County Clean Politics Club relative to the election contest now on in this county for the office of sheriff of this county. The bulletin is addressed to the voters of the county and is as follows:

"In the election contest case of Alvah M. Weston, for the office of Sheriff of Will county, now pending in the County Court at Joliet, Illinois, in order to correct erroneous statements, it becomes necessary to publish this bulletin as to reasons why this contest was instituted, the frauds that have been perpetrated at the election, and the progress of the case in the court.

At the Election held on November 2nd, 1926, gross irregularities of the Ballot Law were reported during the election and the Committee sent watches to several precincts in the City of Joliet, and their report further confirmed our apprehension that in these instances there was not a fair election.

The returns and the manner in which the count was made, without going into details, further strengthened our suspicions that in these precincts an honest count had not been made. The Committee thereupon decided to investigate the returns and a checking of the poll lists of some of the precincts disclosed the fact that men who have many years since left the City of Joliet, people who in fact had died some years previous to the election their names were used in voting at this election. There were numerous instances of this and also of "Repeaters." It was thereupon decided to file an election contest for the purpose of having a recount of the ballots cast at this election. Attorneys Edward R. Nadelhoffer and David R. Anderson were retained, and an election contest petition was filed setting out the various grounds of fraud and mistakes made in the count of the ballots by some of the election judges and clerks. To this petition a demurrer was filed by attorneys for Albert E. Markgraf attacking the technical allegations of the petition. Arguments were made in court and the court in his opinion among other things, said:

"An election contest is for the purpose of determining who was elected. Contesting elections about which there can be said to be a grave question as to the outcome, may help to insure honest elections. The demurrer to the petition itself was overruled, but to some parts was sustained. The effect of the ruling of the court in effect was that the petition was rightly filed, and that under it a recount of the ballots could be had. The issues of fact will be presented to the court very soon and a recount of the ballots had in open court. At this trial the court will decide from the evidence and the ballots who was in fact elected. If Mr. Weston was fairly elected he should have the office of Sheriff, but if he was not elected, he is not entitled to it. Why should anyone object to a recount of the ballots? If the ballots show that Mr. Markgraf is elected, what is there to be afraid of? The continuance of a free government depends on the purity of the ballots, a free and fair election and an honest count. THIS IS ALL THAT WE ASK. We believe that many ballots cast for Mr. Weston were not counted for him and that other ballots voted as straight Republican ballots were afterwards fraudulently marked for Mr. Markgraf.

It has been stated in letters sent out to the election officials, at least by inference, that our petition accuses all election officials of crooked work. THIS IS NOT TRUE. Our accusations are not aimed at the great body of our election judges and clerks who are honest men and have for many years given the people a free election and an honest count. On the contrary it is aimed at some men who regard their election duties lightly, and to be used for their own personal benefit.

As an American citizen you are interested in preserving the purity of the ballot and to accomplish this dishonest and fraudulent practices must be stopped. It is our purpose to send out further bulletins as the occasion may demand. Additional copies of this bulletin may be had by addressing, Mr. William J. Bolton, 413 Collins

Smaller Design in New Paris Prints

Idea Is to Emphasize Slim Silhouette—New Millinery for Spring.

One of the least known yet most inviolable tenets of the mode is that fabrics and fashions must always be diametrically opposite in effect. Thus when the silhouette is involved and all sorts of elaboration are sanctioned by the mode, it is the function of fabrics to be sedate, simple and comparatively in the background; when the mode becomes simple and severe it is the office of materials to enliven what might otherwise be a dull background by vivid and decorative effects. Inasmuch as simplicity is certain to be the essence of the spring fashions, writes a Paris fashion correspondent in the New York Herald-Tribune, it becomes evident that the next is to be one of the seasons in which fabrics are highly significant.

The large prints of last summer will not be repeated this season because of the insistence upon slender lines. The Paris fabricants have submitted silks with smaller designs for the purpose of emphasizing the slim silhouette; indeed, as you will observe from the following details of the important Paris fabric designers, the entire trend of spring materials is to emphasize the return of the ubiquitous streamline silhouette.

Rodier.

This designer, famed for his remarkable weaves and combinations, suggests that fancy fabrics will be utilized chiefly for the bodices of frocks, while their skirts will be of contrast-ingly plain materials. In his collection a number of palm patterns make their attractive appearance. The kasha family is well represented here. Muslikasha is introduced—a thin, sheer silk and wool mixture—and its brother, hindikasha, which is half the weight of kasha. Again there is kashatulla, a coarse basket weave for sports wear, as well as tusslikasha, which is a fabric like tussor in weave and made of silk and wool. Rodier exploits a basket weave like a miniature of kashatulla in wool and calls it toile tussela. For suits there is a pepper-and-salt woolen called Diallic. Embroidered gold or silver patterns are featured, principally in Moyaen age designs, while stripes and figures in woolen accompany plain patterns.

Blanchini Frier.

Here small floral patterns are very much in approval, and old rose is probably the most frequent color. Tiny forget-me-nots appear in foulards with a small silk woven dot included in the pattern. Some of his chiffons are prints with enormous roses in both conventional and realistic patterns. The snakeskin pattern taken from the cobra comes in silver and in gold tinsel for the pattern. Drago satin is approved—a material with a shiny surface and "flamingo"-like back—flam-inga is something like marocain and comes in two tones, plain and changeable patterns.

Chez Meyer et Cie, fabrics seem to have taken a definite step into the fanciful. Here we find lines that curve and "wiggle," surfaces that display the charm of irregularity. Meyer et Cie.

Ensemble of White Crepe Jumper Frock and Coat of Red Crepe.

launch a fabric called frisca valdai, which is a silk and wool in close weave, producing a pebbly effect. For sensible coats there is decania, which has a clear background with speckles in bright colors. There is sedfalla, which has marocain as its basis, but a far more irregular line. Velours lipelluie has tricot for its basis, and is made in a fine basket weave. Maurella is a fine woolen that is like jersey.

Newest Paris Millinery.

There is, after all, to be change in the millinery of the coming spring.
After reams of reports about the continuing dullness of small chapeaux, after impassioned but futile pleas by the hat consciousness propagandists, it appears that Dame Fashion is not the immutable lady you might have fancied her. For there is to be a new cachet to the hats of spring, and you had better not glance so complacently at the dusty hat boxes of last year, lest you receive a disdainful glance on Easter Sunday.

And—mark this—the distinction between the new models and the millinery of yesteryear is not that the modern chapeaux are to have broad brims and beautiful trimmings. It is not that the majestic millinery of the exquisite Victorian is once again to bow gracefully in its midst. You who have listened so often and so wearily to these attempts to grande-dame the hat mode can take heart. This gleesome forecast of hats that are actually different will have nothing to do with those specious predictions.

It has to do with something much less tangible—that fourth dimension of the mode which is known as atmosphere, or effect. Of course, you remember that the genesis of the clochian epoch was a companionable and liberal period known generally as the era of youth. Flappers were the ladies of the moment, and every one of

Coat and Two-Piece Frock Developed in Rodier's Natural Kasha.

them were turned down goloshes, an open coat and a cloche. Each of these items was coexpressive—each was a symbol of truculent youth, and, save only the cloche, each has passed from the picture.

But the cloche, if you will overlook certain minor and unimportant lapses, has reigned over a complacent millinery realm ever since its first royal acceptance. It has never been sedate, it has never been matronly, and—for this you may be thankful—it has never gone Victorian grande dame. Perky, jaunty, youthful, these have been the qualities of its chic, and they are just the qualities you must eschew—sadly if you are young, and pleasantly if you are matronly—if you want to bask in the beaming approval of that arch-critic of the mode on Easter Sunday.

Proud and Haughty Models.

For the new chapeaux of spring are proud and haughty models. If the flowing robes of the new season are to be Grecian in their simplicity, the spring hats will be Roman in their austerity. To the glory that was Greece you may add the hauteur that was Rome. In a word, the jaunty cloche of these many springs is to be succeeded by a hat which, while conforming generally to its measurements, will substitute an undeniably regal air for the democratic atmosphere of the clochian type. It will be far more graceful than the grande dame idea—it will breathe more aristocracy than the very companionable models of earlier seasons. You might call it a happy compromise between the opposing schools of modistes—the elegantes and the modernists.

Subtle lines and distinctions—indeed the subtlest are used to achieve this distinctive change, for there is no really radical departure in either brim crown or fabric from the chapeaux of last season.

Checks Are Predicted for Spring Fashions

If you are one of those women who have always had a weakness for checks, rejoice—the spring will witness a revival of checks, and big checks, broken checks and the conventional designs that are so chic. And they appear on silks, the new lightweight woollens, and on the cotton fabrics, which from all accounts will have a decided vogue this summer.

There is something about checks that always seems to suggest a tal-lored effect. One never can visualize them made up into anything elaborate or fussy. When chosen for the smartly simple frocks that form the basis of the modern wardrobe, there is probably nothing that gives greater satisfaction.

Fuge checks, shown in some of the new silks, are very effective in the piece but must be handled with considerable discretion. The smaller patterns, however, are almost universally becoming and so varied are the color schemes that there is a design for every woman.

THE PADDED ATHLETE

By EDWARD E. BARKER

(Copyright by W. G. Chapman.)

ARCHIE FERGUSON had greatness thrust upon him, could not avoid it, and it spoiled him. He was a fair-looking fellow, rather awkward in his shape, but bulky and strong. When he graduated from Redfern academy he had just made a hit. It was in a football game. At a critical juncture he was the human key to a human wedge, where by sheer bodily bulk he blocked the finesse of the rival team and won a famous game.

"A natural born athlete," the newspapers put it. "A big, fat, conceited chump!" his enemies declared. The school trainer saw easy money in view and earned a fifty-dollar fee putting Archie through a course of muscle building. Everywhere Archie played the athlete card strong. With his newspaper publicity and quite some money he faced a two months' vacation he determined to enjoy.
When he went to Haven Springs he soon made it known who he was. He "was stuck on his shape," as the saying goes. He set at work to tone down various sinuosities of his figure by artificially building up contiguous fleshy territory.

One day an old friend, Bob Travers, ran across him. They had been close chums at school.

"I say, Archie," observed Bob, "I see all you have to do is to strut up and down the promenade to win all kinds of admiring opinions from the ladies."

"Is that so?" said Archie, drawing himself up to his full height.

"Sure thing. I want you to show yourself with me for about a week.
Disengaged?"

"Oh, yes," answered Archie, "I'm just putting on the vacation before I start into business. Governor going to stake me and all that."

"Well, you can help me out, Archie, and I want you to do it. The facts are these: I dote on a girl living in Wadham. She's a great friend of my cousin. I sort of shone about her until a new fellow came upon the scene. His name is Jones—Dick Jones. He's a fellow half your size—quiet, meek, I call it. Pretty smart, though, for he just graduated from a big college."

"You want him side-tracked, do you?" asked Archie.

"That's it. I want him scared away. You can do it."

"As how, now, for instance?"

"Well, hang around with me. Work up to a quarrel with him—see?"

"And—crush him, eh?" smiled Archie, with a confident glance at the bulging muscles of his right arm.

"I'm agreeable."

So it was that Dick Jones and Nina Swift, enjoying a mutually harmonious companionship, had their pleasant lives intruded upon by the two new arrivals.

Archie Ferguson showed up in Wadham in his best possible trim. He wore a sporty costume and tight clothing purposely. This enabled a full showing off of his great shoulders, his noble chest, his bulging arm muscles!

The habits of the hotel where he and Travers stopped were duly dazzled by his overpowering appearance.
Archie thought it clever to scare un-derlings. He knocked down a waiter who spilled some water on him. He chased down and castigated a poor peddler who fell against him on a slippery sidewalk.

In fact Archie enjoyed building up a dubious reputation as a modern Hercules, and boasting indicating to Travers "that he was anxious to meet a foeman worthy of his steel."

Travers introduced him to his coun-sin, then to Miss Swift, and this brought him in contact with Dick.
They met together each day. Ada treated Travers as a friend and was courteous to Archie. Young Jones was every inch a gentleman, but he did not warm up to either Travers or his friend.

There were strained relations under the surface and Dick began to understand them. Once when Archie was somewhat incapacitated he was openly insulting to Dick, but the latter refused to be provoked, realizing his condition.

"I don't seem able to work that fellow Jones up to any sense of manly spirit," observed Archie one day to Travers. "I don't like that steady look in his eyes and he don't look a coward, but why don't he come to the test?"

"Afraid of getting mugged up, I suppose," replied Travers. He's got nerve, though, for he won't flinch from his position. He's after Ada and he's no mean rival."

It was the second afternoon after that when Travers came to the hotel with a gloomy, vicious-looking face.

"Say, Archie," he spoke wrathfully,
"I can't stand this much longer!"

"Stand what?" inquired Archie.

"Jones. He's with Ada most of the time. She treats me friendly enough, but seems to avoid being with me alone. I'm afraid that fellow will get ahead of me, pop the question, and then my cake will be all dough."

"You want me to act, I suppose?"
intimated Archie.

"I want that fellow driven out of the field."

"Or laid up for a spell, so you can have your chance of courting that pretty girl?" leered Archie. "All right, leave it to me."

Just the right opportunity he desired arrived for Archie. It was two mornings later. He and Travers were walking along the street when Archie descried Beauty, a pet dog belonging to Ada, coming down the street in advance of Dick, who held the little animal as a great favorite.

"It's my chance," whispered Archie to Travers, and as Beauty neared him he pretended to trip over the dog. He raised his foot and gave Beauty a kick that sent it to the curb. Then the poor little animal limped away in pitiable pain.

"You brutal coward!" burst forth Dick, his blood on fire at the act.

"What's that?" demanded Archie, advancing upon him with scowling brows and set teeth.

Now Archie had never engaged in a real fist battle outside of the gymnasium. He had, however, got to think himself an expert prize fighter. He envied Dick because he was a gentleman; he was glad of the present circumstance because Miss Swift had always treated him distantly, in her clear, womanly way tracing the coarseness and artificiality beneath the surface.

Dick stood his ground. Archie swung toward him as if afraid his prey would escape him. He swooped, as it might be, confident in the superiority of weight to science. A little later he learned that the quiet, unpretentious Dick had been first out of a champion college crew, and the best all-around man in general gymnasium practice.

"I'll make you swallow your words!" gritted out Archie, trying to appear terrible. "One blow and—hah!"

The breath was nearly squeezed out of his body. He had aimed a cruel blow at his adversary. It was dexterously evaded. His foe had clinched with him. A rapid manipulation of "jui jitsu" tactics baffled him, made him a mere child in the hands of an expert. He was flung back, his head struck the pavement and he lay there insensible.

A crowd soon gathered. One person brought some water, a second drew away the clothing of the unconscious baggart.

"Hello!" exclaimed this latter, as his probing hand met a bunch of massed cloth across the shoulders.
"Padded—and his arm muscles, too!
Say, here's a fraud for you!"

The padded athlete sneaked out of town that night. Travers followed suit the next day. It was as well, for when Dick tenderly carried poor, crippled Beauty back to its mistress, there were tears, gratitude, and, in that sentimental moment, he told his love.

Cambodian Dance Only for King's Pleasure

The Cambodian dance is an established art that goes back several centuries. It never has changed as far as the technique, the style and the dress is concerned. The imperial Cambodian dancers are entirely a separate institution from all other organizations in Indo-China or elsewhere. The ballet is under the direct supervision of the ruling monarch. Great care is taken in the training of a ballerina.
Not only is she under the constant vigil of the dance instructor, but also her food, her sleep and her recreation are so regulated that eventually she can be controlled like an automaton.
The Cambodian ballet is exclusively for the entertainment of the king and his court. On rare occasions a Cambodian ballet has been seen outside the palace. Sometimes occidental travelers specially favored by the king have been permitted to witness the dance in his courtyard.—Mentor Magazine.

The Cruel Critic

William Lyon Phelps, the critic, said in a lecture in Baltimore:

"Criticism should be just, but it shouldn't be cruel."

"An art critic visited a painter's studio the other day and the painter showed him a number of pen-and-ink sketches.

"Why do you do these things?" the critic asked.

"Oh, well, they kept the pot bolling," said the painter, rather apologetically.

"Ah, I see; you light the fire with them, do you?" said the critic."

Flyers Fight Boll Weevil

From 90,000 to 100,000 acres of cotton will be dusted from the air this year in order to combat the foe of America's cotton, the boll weevil. A fleet of 18 airplanes based at Monroe, La., will be operated by a commercial concern, which last year sprinkled arsenical poisons on 50,000 acres of cotton. The insect-fighting airmen will operate throughout the Southern states and will have the co-operation of Dr. B. R. Coad, of the United States bureau of entomology, and of the Louisiana College of Agriculture.

In the Nature of a Shot

The New Yorker tells this one:
From the tabloid newspaper row comes a story about an old-time reporter who got a job there. At every turn the city editor blocked him; he could do nothing right. "Well, I guess I'd better quit," he said one day sourly. The only answer he got was "Huh!" "Nothing I do seems to please you. I think I'll go back to my old business." This caught the editor's ear. "That so! What was your old business?" "Newspaper work."

ENDLESS HUMAN CHAIN SEEKS TO SAVE LIFE

for Alfred Frick, mindful only of the fact that in their hands rested his life. All through the afternoon, evening, and long hours of the night they worked, each successive relief approaching the bedside in time to continue the forced respiration without the loss of a single stroke. Up, down, up, down, in tireless, never-ending cadence; compressing and releasing the paralyzing diaphragm in young Frick's stricken body—performing the life preserving function of breathing for their friend and fellow-employee.

Wednesday morning, after 72 hours of artificial respiration, the first encouraging message came from the bedside that the young man had almost completely recovered consciousness, was able to talk coherently and to sip a few swallows of milk from a glass. He seemed further strengthened by nearly eight hours of sleep Tuesday night the first he has had since Sunday. He also reported feeling warmth in his feet and legs—paralyzed since Saturday night.

Physicians are hopeful that these improvements presage the departure of the paralysis from the diaphragm, permitting the resumption of normal breathing.

Meanwhile, Frick's fellow-employees are ceaseless in their vigilant untiring in the labor which is preserving his thread of life.

TODAY'S Ford CAR

Before you buy any make of automobile let us show you Today's Ford Car

You may consider that you know the Ford Car. You may have been a Ford owner for years and think you are familiar with the splendid satisfaction which the Ford gives, and yet unless you have made it a point to examine the Ford Car as it is BUILT TODAY—to drive it and note its improved engine performance—relax in it over rough roads, and experience the increased comfort which it affords, and to learn of the many recent improvements, you do not know the Ford Car as it is built today.

Many of the new Ford Car features are obvious—balloon tire equipment—wire wheels—pyroxylin finish—a choice of colors—improved upholstery, etc., but the big satisfaction to you, as the owner of Today's Ford Car is to be found in the way in which it will fulfill your expectations of what a modern motor car should be. You will be amazed at the increased power resulting from the new Vaporizer, the smoother engine operation, the increased gasoline mileage, the improved riding qualities, and above all, in the way in which this car handles and performs in traffic and on the open road.

In short, you must drive a new Ford Car to be a fair judge of present-day motor car values.

We invite your inspection of Today's Ford Cars.
